Acknowledgements

I would like to express my sincere appreciation and thanks to my promoter, Prof. Sam Mellet, for his unfailing support, advice and encouragement throughout the course of this study. Even though the long-distance nature of this study created communication difficulties, I could always rely on his help and support. I would also like to thank him for reviewing numerous drafts of the thesis.

Many thanks to Prof. Bester for his help and guidance with respect to the statistical analysis and presentation of the quantitative data.

I am greatly indebted to the head-teachers, teachers, parents and learners of the five schools, which formed part of this study. For ethical reasons it is not possible to reveal their names, however I would like to thank the head-teachers for welcoming me to their schools; their help ensured that the research proceeded smoothly. I am most grateful to teachers and parents for their valuable time, without their participation this research would not have been possible. I would also like to thank the learners who conscientiously took the questionnaires home to their parents and, later, returned them to the school.

I would like to thank Dr. C. Tsabedze of the English Department of the University of Swaziland for her translation into siSwati of the parent questionnaire.

Financial support from the University of South Africa, in the form of a Merit Bursary, is gratefully acknowledged.

Finally, I would like to thank my family. I am immensely grateful to my husband Ara who spent many evenings helping me to transfer the coded parental responses to answer sheets prior to computer analysis and later, spent many more evenings proof-reading the entire thesis. I would also like to thank him for the many weekends and evenings when he was forced to adopt the role of a single parent so that I could work on my thesis. Without his help and encouragement I would never have undertaken the thesis and would have taken far longer to complete it. I would also like to thank my children, Keyan and Damian, who were forced to sacrifice many outings and vacations and a great deal of attention as a result of this research. I would also like to convey my deepest feelings of appreciation to my mother Hazel Hofmeyr who baby-sat on numerous occasions and provided a great deal of other support on my visits to South Africa without which this research would have been very difficult. Many thanks also to Siamak and Negar Monadjem who also provided unfailing support and encouragement throughout the study.
