Table of Contents

Chapter 1: Introduction to the study

1.1 Introduction
1.2 Research problem
1.3 Context of the research problem
1.3.1 What is immersion?
1.3.2 The Schleswig-Holstein Immersion Programme and the Kiel study
1.3.3 Vocabulary size
1.4 Research aims
1.5 Research questions
1.6 Hypotheses
1.7 Research method
1.7.1 Research procedure
1.8 Synopsis of the remainder of this dissertation

Chapter 2: Literature review

2.1 Introduction
2.2 Immersion
2.2.1 Immersion programmes – the beginnings
2.2.2 Immersion in the European context
2.2.3 Immersion in the South African context
2.3 The importance of vocabulary knowledge
2.3.1 The nature of vocabulary knowledge
2.3.1.1 The concept of a ‘word’
2.3.1.2 Receptive and productive vocabulary
2.3.2 Vocabulary size and reading comprehension
2.3.2.1 The role of incidental vocabulary learning
Chapter 3: Research method

3.1 Introduction
3.2 Hypotheses: a brief rationale and formulation
3.3 Subjects
3.4 Instruments
3.4.1 Questionnaire
3.4.2 Tests A and B
3.4.3 Nation’s (1990) Vocabulary Levels Test
3.4.4 Writing exercise
3.5 Procedure
3.6 Data analysis
3.6.1 Receptive vocabulary size
3.6.2 Productive vocabulary size
3.7 Statistical analysis
3.8 Conclusion

Chapter 4: Findings

4.1 Introduction
4.2 Length of immersion
4.2.1 Length of immersion hypothesis: general
4.2.2 Length of immersion hypothesis: receptive vocabulary
4.2.3 Summary of results: receptive vocabulary
4.2.4 Length of immersion hypothesis: productive vocabulary
4.2.5 Summary of length of immersion findings