JOURNEYS INTO THE GARDEN OF SEXUALITY: THE VOICES OF WOMEN'S SEXUALITY IN PASTORAL CONVERSATIONS

by

NICOLINE SPIES

submitted in part fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

MASTER OF THEOLOGY

in the subject

PRACTICAL THEOLOGY - WITH SPECIALISATION IN PASTORAL THERAPY

at the

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH AFRICA

SUPERVISOR: MS E NIEHAUS

JOINT SUPERVISOR: PROF JPJ THERON

NOVEMBER 2005
I declare that Journeys Into The Garden Of Sexuality: The Voices Of Women’s Sexuality In Pastoral Conversations is my own work and that all the sources that I have used or quoted have been indicated and acknowledged by means of complete references.

Name: ______________________

Signature: ___________________

Date: ______________________
CONTENTS

Declaration i
Acknowledgements vii
Abstract viii
Key terms viii
Glossary of terms x
Foreword xii
Dominant discourse(s) xii

CHAPTER ONE: MAPPING THE JOURNEY AHEAD

1.1 In the beginning ..... 1
1.2 Research curiosity: times have changed, or have it? 4
1.3 Research aims 5
1.3.1 Exploring Christian women’s life-giving experiences of their sexuality 5
1.3.2 Co-constructing alternative narratives about Christian women’s sexuality with the research participants 5
1.3.3 Breaking the silence regarding sexuality in the church 6
1.3.4 Challenging the dominant discourse publicly and corporately 6
1.4 Discursive positioning - Voices of the past echoing today 6
1.4.1 Social construction discourse 7
1.4.2 Feminist discourse 9
1.4.3 A participatory approach to practical theology 11
1.4.3.1 Feminist theology 13
1.4.4 A participatory approach to pastoral care 15
1.5 Research methodology 16
1.6 Research procedure 19
1.6.1 Inviting participants 20
1.6.1.1 The other voices 22
1.6.2 Data collecting process 22
1.6.2.1 Feminist interview 22
1.6.2.2 Narrative as data 24
1.6.2.3 Documentation 25
1.6.3 Data analysis 27
1.7 Ethical dilemmas and ways to address these 28
1.8 Summary 31
1.9 The story continues … 32
CHAPTER TWO: JOURNEYING BACK IN TIME - A BRIEF HISTORY OF WOMEN’S SEXUALITY WITHIN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

2.1  Introduction 33
2.2  A religious historical overview 33
2.3  A philosophical historical overview – the philosophers and the church fathers 35
   2.3.1  Patriarchy 36
   2.3.2  Sexuality, sin and procreation 36
   2.3.3  Female inferiority 37
   2.3.4  Pederasty versus marriage 38
   2.3.5  The Reformation – reverting back to St Augustine’s views of sexual intercourse 39
2.4  Judaism, sexuality and bodily functions 40
   2.4.1  Puberty and menarche 41
   2.4.2  Virginity and sexual intercourse 43
      2.4.2.1  Female virginity 43
      2.4.2.2  Adultery 45
   2.4.3  Childbirth 45
   2.4.4  Onah 46
2.5  Patriarchy, power relations and women’s sexuality 47
2.6  Foucault’s views of the history of sexuality 50
2.7  Patriarchy - a legacy of sexual objectification: The impact of the philosophers and the church fathers in 2005 53
   2.7.1  Pornography 53
   2.7.2  Rape 54
      2.7.2.1  A woman’s place is in the home 54
      2.7.2.2  A woman’s body becomes the property of her husband 55
      2.7.2.3  Woman, the seductress of man 56
      2.7.2.4  Male sexuality is instinctive 56
2.8  Recent Christian views of female sexuality 57
   2.8.1  Disturbing discovery in recent liturgy 58
2.9  Character assassination of women 59

CHAPTER THREE: PORNOGRAPHY, DIVORCE AND HOPE

3.1  Narratives of the constructions of sexuality 61
3.2  Cathy: an undying conviction of living with hope 62
3.3 The development of sexual awareness 62
3.4 Cathy’s mother as a role model on sexuality 63
3.5 Sexual education 65
3.6 Moving into womanhood 67
3.7 Policing of sexuality 67
3.8 And they will become one in flesh 68
3.9 Pornography, disillusionment and isolation 69
3.10 Female sexual desire and pleasure 71
3.11 Discourses regarding divorced women 73
  3.11.1 Divorced women need sexual intercourse 74
  3.11.2 Marginalising discourses regarding female desire in divorced women 75
3.12 In need of spiritual support 76
3.13 Social needs of single people and the church 77
3.14 Sexual needs of single people 78
  3.14.1 Men are the hunters 80
3.15 Doing hope in the face of adversity 80
3.16 Sexual intercourse and sin 81
3.17 Reflections 82

CHAPTER FOUR: THE NARRATIVE OF A FARM GIRL’S SEXUALITY 84
4.1 Marlene 84
4.2 Sexual awareness in childhood 84
4.3 Puberty and sexual education 85
4.4 Sexual awareness in teenage years 85
4.5 Virginity, pre-marital sex and the church 86
  4.5.1 Silence in the church on sexuality 88
4.6 Marriage and pre-marital counselling/conversations 89
4.7 The wedding night and thereafter 91
  4.7.1 Embarrassment and reluctance to express sexual pleasure 93
  4.7.2 Female desire and bodily functions 93
4.8 A life changing experience 94
  4.8.1 Size counts 96
4.9 Support during life changing experiences 96
4.10 New beginnings 98
4.11 Transparency with regard to alternative ways to achieve sexual pleasure 99
  4.11.1 Discourses regarding masturbation 101
4.11.2 Learning ‘proper behaviour’ – foe or friend? 102
4.12 A wife’s role as the nurturer and its influence on her sexuality 102
4.13 Policing of sexuality through dress code 105
4.14 Reflections 107

CHAPTER FIVE: POWER RELATIONS, CONFESSIONS, HEALING AND A NEW NARRATIVE
5.1 Marelise 108
5.2 Childhood awareness of relationships and sexuality 109
5.3 Tragedy strikes 111
5.4 A picture-perfect life 112
5.5 Tragedy strikes again 112
5.6 A child’s awareness of other people’s sexuality 113
5.7 Development of childhood sexuality 114
5.8 Development of relationships and sexual practices 114
5.8.1 A mother’s role is to protect 116
5.9 Sexual acts in non-marital relations 117
5.10 Abusive relationships and sexual practices 118
5.11 Embarking on pre-marital sex 120
5.11.1 Pre-marital sex is a sin 121
5.11.2 Different standards of pre-marital sex for men and woman 123
5.12 Abusive practices and the church 124
5.13 Meeting someone special 125
5.14 Confessions 126
5.15 Indecent proposals 127
5.15.1 Narrative practices and therapy: deconstructing indecent proposals 128
5.16 Reverberating experiences 129

CHAPTER SIX: DIFFERENT SEASONS IN THE GARDEN OF SEXUALITY
6.1 Reflections on my personal experiences of this research journey 130
6.1.2 Challenges 131
6.1.2.1 Intellectual challenges 131
6.1.2.2 Spiritual challenges 132
6.1.2.3 Physical challenges 132
6.1.2.4 Emotional challenges 133
6.1.3 Moving to a position of awareness 134
6.1.4 Disclosure 136
6.1.4.1 Self disclosure to participants 136
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to the following:

Elonya Niehaus – for being my mentor and supervisor, and for patiently journeying with me. Without Elonya’s continuous encouragement and her only accepting my very best, this dissertation would have been of a lesser quality.

Professor Jacques Theron – for his constructive remarks and several helpful suggestions, which contributed to the clarity of this dissertation.

Idette Noomé – for her editorial expertise, as this ensured that my thoughts and views were reflected in a concise manner, making this dissertation more understandable.

Elsabé Nell – for her efficiency in assisting me in the search for relevant literature.

Jansie Killian – for ensuring that the referencing in this study is correct and complete.

Linda – for being a woman, a friend and a fellow traveller in discovering new ways-of-being.

My family and friends – for all the times that you accepted that this research journey was my priority and that, even though I was at times not available to you, you kept on supporting me.

This journey would not have been possible without the love, understanding, encouragement and support of my two children, Felix and Vivian, and most of all, my husband, Pieter. My bedroom became my study in more ways than one. Thank you for creating that space for me and loving me the way you do.

Cathy, Marlene and Marelisé – thank you for allowing me in the sacred spaces of your womanhood, your loves, your hurts and your vulnerabilities. My life’s journey has been enriched beyond words by your narratives.

Lastly, I give my thanks and praise to God for all the opportunities I had, the abilities I was given and for my sexuality.
ABSTRACT

This research project arose from an awareness that many Christian women experience female sexual desire and the expression of sexual pleasure within a religious context to be a forbidden subject and that they are consequently isolated in silence. The social construction of sexuality within the history of Christianity was briefly explored to see which discourses underpin current constructions of White Christian female sexuality. This feminist, participatory action research project challenged the silence on women’s sexuality by inviting three women to narrate their personal stories of sexuality. With the help of narrative therapeutic practices, some of the dominant social and religious discourses that constitute White Christian female sexuality were challenged and explored. This research project aimed at the co-construction of narratives of sexuality that will hopefully be life-giving to Christian women’s experiences with sexuality.

KEY TERMS

Christianity, women, sexuality, sexual desire, sexual pleasure; sexual intercourse, social construction of sexuality, feminist discourses; patriarchal discourses; narrative therapeutic approaches
Sexuality is to feminism what work is to Marxism:
that which is most one’s own, yet most taken away.

(Catherine MacKinnon quoted in Graham 1990:192)
GLOSSARY OF TERMS

It may be helpful to readers to understand how I saw the terms that I use(d) in this research project. I applied the definitions of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, as formulated in its article on Human sexuality and the Christian faith – Episcopal edition (1991). These definitions resonate with my general way of speaking and my understanding of these terms as well as those of the participants.

‘Human sexuality’ is far more than ‘sex’ (popularly used to refer to sexual intercourse), although it includes that. Sexuality cannot be reduced to specific acts, urges, or drives. It is an aspect of who we are as human beings, whether or not we engage in activity that is considered ‘sexual’. Our sexuality involves our way of living in the world as male and female persons. We are bodies created by God, sensual and sensuous human beings who yearn for relationships with others.

‘Sex’ (on its own), as the term is used in this study, refers to the anatomical differences between males and females.

‘Sex’ (I used this term as a shortened version of ‘sexual intercourse’ in order to promote readability, for example, in ‘pre-marital sex’ instead of ‘pre-marital sexual intercourse’, ‘extra-marital sex’ instead of ‘extra-marital sexual intercourse’).

‘Sexual intercourse’ is used to refer to those intimate acts of sexual attraction, expression and union that involve the genital organs and which can lead to a sexual climax.

‘Gender identity’ is based on a biological distinction and is more culturally conditioned. The term refers to how we perceive ourselves and how we live out or express our identities and roles as males and females. A person's gender identity or role is not always synonymous with his or her biological sex.

Our predominant sexual attraction to one gender or the other – or to both – is our ‘sexual identity’. (Some researchers prefer to use the term sexual orientation, but since listening to gay people, I believe that ‘identity’ is a better word. Most gay people say that they have felt the way they do since they can remember. It is part of who they are. The word ‘orientation’ implies choice and potential for change. For most gay people, their sexual identity is not a choice, but a given.)

I also used the following terms. These definitions are my own. The definitions are provided to enhance the possibility of consensus regarding the meaning of these terms (as used) between myself and the reader.

Life-giving – any action or discourse that promotes or results in a constructive experience for or influence on an individual or a relationship at an emotional/spiritual/physical or intellectual level.

Life-denying – any action or discourse that demotes a person’s sense of self or results in a destructive experience for or influence on an individual or a relationship at an emotional/spiritual/physical or intellectual level.

Life-restricting – any action or discourse that demotes or devalues a person’s sense of self or results in experiences that prohibit or limit the possibility of constructive growth or experiences at an emotional/spiritual/physical or intellectual level.

All live-giving, life-denying or life-restricting experiences or discourses would be determined as such by the context(s) of the persons involved and their understanding of such an experience or discourse.
FOREWORD

In this study, I have drawn on my personal experiences as a woman and as a local preacher in the Methodist Church.

As a pastoral therapist-in-training, I engaged in therapeutic conversations with members of the congregation of the church where I serve. My perceptions were based on my experiences and my understandings as they were informed by these pastoral conversations. At a personal level, I included my own perceptions that were shaped by my social interaction with my friends and my family, as well as my sense impressions, thus an intuitive sense or awareness. One of these sense impressions was that there are several constituting discourses that inform Christian women’s perceptions and experiences of their sexuality.

DOMINANT DISCOURSE(S)

The assumed presence of constituting discourses was a crucial departure point for this research project. I would define the term ‘discourse’ briefly as a belief system which constitutes our sense of reality. Different people may view the same discourse differently, as some might interpret and accept that particular discourse as ‘the truth’ and others might not. Usually a dominant discourse is regarded by most members of a society as the truth. Those people whose belief systems do not fall within the dominant discourse could become marginalised, especially when they reject or challenge the accepted norm. My understanding of dominant discourses which enjoy truth status was informed by Foucault’s views (cited in White & Epston 1990:20). He argues that ‘truth’ should not be seen as absolute, as if a belief system were objective or was based on intrinsic facts. Instead, one should recognise that ‘truth’ consists of constructed ideas that are allotted the status of a truth. ‘These “truths” are “normalizing” in the sense that they construct norms around which persons are incited to shape or constitute their lives’ (White & Epston 1990:19-20). It would seem that there are many such ‘truths’ within a Christian religious context and that they prescribe what is regarded as acceptable sexual behaviour for Christians.

For the purposes of this research project, I argued that the dominant discourse regarding Christian women’s sexuality has its origin in a particular reading of Judaic texts and that it is still perpetuated in Christian practices. Among Christians and in the Bible, there are many discourses with regard to sexuality. Some of these discourses present female sexuality in a positive manner, but others entrench constructions regarding Christian sexuality in negativity. For the purposes of this study, I focus mainly on a number of the life-restricting or life-denying discourses which construct Christian views of sexuality. I isolated one particular religious discourse that I believe has assumed a dominant status. During my initial conversations with the participants, I shared this discourse (which I argued had assumed dominant status) with them, and all the participants agreed that this discourse has become dominant. In terms of this discourse, sexuality is perceived to be sinful and shameful; and women are painted as temptresses who seduce men into sexual acts. This discourse shrouds sexuality in a veil of secrecy and implies negativity, as Heschel (2003:155) points out:

Describing sinful behavior with metaphors of femininity, the tradition of Isaiah was continued in the Talmud and in medieval Jewish texts. Women were regarded as fountains of sexual temptation seducing even the most pious man if he were momentarily distracted from his study and prayer.