INTRODUCTION

The worldwide and local information explosion has made a publication like this almost essential for the subject of church history. We publish it in the hope that it will be useful to students and researchers of church history who are trying to understand the makings and workings of Christianity in South Africa. This publication forms part of a broader plan to further the realisation of a new perspective on South African church history and to make available some basic research results for this purpose. A new perspective on South African church history implies a reinterpretation of South African church history along non-apologetical and non-ideological lines.

As the fruit of this research, two publications have already seen the light, i.e. Volumes 1 and 2 of the History of the Church in Southern Africa: A Select Bibliography. In addition to the current publication various others are already in the pipeline: a book of documents and sources on South African church history, a bibliography of periodical articles on Southern African church history, a pictorial and map collection of South African church history, and eventually also a new history of Christianity in South Africa.

As regards the use of this guide we want to make the following comments. With reference to archives, libraries and museums (chapter 1) we purposely decided to personalise the guide by including specific names of people in charge as well as telephone numbers, although we realise that these are things that change constantly. Furthermore, the hours of opening must also be treated with some caution. In some cases the term NAREM has been added to entries on archives, libraries and museums. This implies that the holdings of such institutions are included on the National Register of Manuscripts (NAREM) which was initiated by the State Archives.

As regards the general bibliographies which are mentioned in chapter 2, it must be stated that they should not be seen as a complete list, but rather as a list of some of the most important bibliographies. Particularly Hofmeyr and Cross's bibliographies mentioned above may prove to be very helpful. Theses and dissertations have also been included in these bibliographies.

Chapter 3 contains a list of periodicals and magazines which may be of use to the church historical researcher.

In chapter 4 a list of practising South African church historians is to be found. Those who are attached to universities have the name of their institutions indicated next to their names.

As regards universities, colleges and seminaries which are involved in church historical research and/or training, we first mention them according to denomination (chapter 5.1). In chapter 5.2 they are arranged according to geographical locality.
In chapter 6 the most important professional societies which relate to church history are mentioned.

As regards buildings of church historical interest (chapter 7) some of them, especially those from very small towns, have been arranged according to their magisterial districts.

Chapter 8 contains the names and addresses of most South African denominations which may prove to be of use to the researcher in acquiring further information.

We are greatly indebted to many people and institutions for their kind cooperation in this project. First of all Marjorie Froise's very useful Christian Handbook 1986/87 has proved to be valuable as a source of information and a means of checking some of our information. Many other people kindly and promptly replied to letters, questionnaires and telephone calls. Thanks are also due to the Department of Publishing Services at Unisa which is always willing to consider publications of this kind though they are not aimed at the commercial market.

To Annatjie Smit to whom this book is dedicated we finally wish to express a special word of appreciation and affection, not only for typing this manuscript but also for the many different tasks she has fulfilled so conscientiously.

While realising the importance of a publication of this nature, we are also aware that it can never be complete. We therefore would appreciate additional information and any corrections which could be included in possible later editions.
