ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The following people are acknowledged with gratitude for contributing in some way or another to the completion of this study and thesis:

- My promoters, Dr E Cronje and Prof. LC Gerdes, for their unstinting support, belief in the quality of my efforts, and attempts at reigniting me when going off on too many tangents too deeply and enthusiastically and threatening to go into encyclopedic depths in writing everything up. Above all, for their entirely professional supervision, in terms of the balance between guidance and posing the challenge to be independent, turnover time, penetrating reading of draft versions, quality of thoughts and inputs, knowledge in the field, and just being who they are, - unprejudiced persons drawing on all the best characteristics available to women and men. Also again, to Prof. Gerdes, for introducing me to sex-role studies at undergraduate level, and for keeping my interest alive by supervising my Master’s dissertation before this thesis.

- All the research participants, for sparing me some of their time and showing interest, and really providing data of excellent quality while confronting the depths of their personal close relationships.

- The data-collection company (FutureAntz, and Arnauld and Steven) who came to the rescue when it became difficult to reach my targets, and assisted in soliciting the required numbers of protocols towards the end.

- Contact people (thank you Yvonne, and Juan, and Yvonne) with access to gay and lesbian organisation members, as well as other institutions, from where another number of respondents joined the project.

- My family, who had to be aware for long years, days and nights, of the nagging presence of the laptop computer and many stacks of paper in the house and everywhere, and although I tried to be unobtrusive about it, I must have been a different person at times exactly when I had to be there also in my own close relationship and family, going through its own challenges to blend the two careers of committed professional and family people, with two children surely imitating behaviour to suit their development into teenagers, adolescents and students. Thank you Jeanne, and Hesti and Thinus. Hopefully we are all richer people after it all. Also my parents, who must have done something right in making me a curious and disciplined person interested in and able to manage my own development up to the present day.

- My employer, the Human Sciences Research Council, for providing and honing the many skills one requires, generous conditions of service that place a high premium on professional development, the provision of appropriate study leave, and financial incentives in the form of study bursaries to cover some of the many costs incurred. Also employers in their individual capacity as superiors and mentors, for being soundboards, and spurring me on to completion, and providing space in this regard, especially over the last four months. Thank you Anil, and Vijay.

- Other colleagues and academic friends, such as Leona, Marie, Pieter, René, Ursula, and many unnamed ones, for maintaining a keen interest in my progress, though being often as caught up with their own studies, as I have been. Many others, prepared to listen with great interest from time to time to what was often no more than efforts on my part to clear my thoughts and wrestle out the way ahead.

- Life, for providing the incentives, curiosity and material to intrigue, discover and contribute.
