

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express my sincere and heartfelt thanks to the people who have supported me in my seventeen-year journey towards becoming a clinical psychologist, and have helped me to realize the fulfillment of my lifelong dream.

To my husband, Ruben, for being my strongest support and harshest critic – thank you from the bottom of my heart. You have inspired me when I was at my lowest. Without your help the completion of this dissertation would have been impossible.

My beloved children, Daniel and Tanya, who have had to compete for my attention amidst the turmoil of trying to balance motherhood, marriage, career, student life and a dissertation. Thank you, my darlings, for your patience, understanding and for teaching me to live in the moment.

To my supervisor, Beate von Krosigk, for your commitment, devotion and critical feedback. Most of all, thank you for the vital role you have played in reconnecting me with my Maker.

To my family of origin - Mummy, Daddy, Cedric, Gail and Wendy and their spouses, Amanda, Colin (late) and Steven and their children, Nichole, Keenan, Grant, Cara and Jodi – words cannot capture my sincerest gratitude for the major contribution you have made to my life as described in the pages of this dissertation. A very special thank you for your support, concern and love as I traveled along this journey.

A very big thank you to all my extended family – those present and past for their contribution to the memories of my past and present. You are a vital link in the chain of life associated with the Groener/Marks clan.

To all my friends, especially Pat, Brian, Jonathan, Lyn, Peter, Thami, Louisa, Shirley, Eileen, Simone, Sheree, Karien, Regina, Marnie, Hélène and Petza – thanks for your encouragement.

A special word of thanks to my previous supervisors, Kate Grieve and Patricia Oosthuizen for the important role you have played.

To my UNISA trainers – Kate, David, Stan, Lesiba, Peter and Vasi and my fellow master's students - thank you.

A special word of thanks to James Kitching and Maryna de Kock for your kind assistance.

My supervisors at Helen Joseph and Coronation Hospitals – Judy, Elmarie, Pearl and Rahsika as well as fellow-interns – thank you.

To the clients who have shared parts of their lives with me – my sincere appreciation.

My therapist, Vanessa Richards (no relation of mine) – your accompaniment has been invaluable.

My colleagues in my peer support group – thank you for your help and support.

To St. Catherine's Church in Bramley and the Navigation Group – thank you for your prayerful support.

Above all, thank you, Lord, for your unconditional love that inspired me to complete this dissertation.
