

FACILITATING PHENOMENOLOGICAL INTERVIEWS IN EDUCATION
BY MEANS OF REFLEXOLOGY:
IMPLICATIONS FOR RESEARCH IN EDUCATION

CHAPTER 1

pp. 1 – 24

ORIENTATION TO THE STUDY

- 1.1 INTRODUCTION AND RATIONALE , p1
- 1.2 PROBLEM STATEMENT AND RESEARCH QUESTIONS, p5
- 1.3 AIMS OF THE RESEARCH, p5
- 1.4 ASSUMPTIONS, p6
- 1.5 PARADIGMATIC PERSPECTIVE , p7
- 1.6 MAIN CONCEPTS , p10
 - 1.6.1 Facilitation
 - 1.6.2 Phenomenological research
 - 1.6.3 Interviews
 - 1.6.4 Education
 - 1.6.5 Experience
 - 1.6.6 Reflexology
 - 1.6.6.1 Hermeneutic definition
 - 1.6.6.2 Functional definition
 - 1.6.6.3 Definition in terms of South African law
 - 1.6.7 Complementary and / or Alternative Medicine (CAM)
 - 1.6.8 Intellectual bilingualism
 - 1.6.9 The mind/body link
- 1.7 RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHOD , p15
 - 1.7.1 Ethical measures
 - 1.7.2 Trustworthiness
 - 1.7.3 The research methodology
 - 1.7.3.1 The literature search
 - 1.7.3.2 Interviews with researchers
 - 1.7.3.3 Interviews with participants
 - 1.7.4 Sample

- 1.7.5 Data collection
- 1.7.6 Data analysis
- 1.8 DIVISION OF CHAPTERS , p19
- 1.9 THE ACADEMIC BILINGUAL NATURE OF THIS THESIS IN TERMS OF TRENDS AT INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION , p21
- 1.10 CONCLUSION , p24

CHAPTER 2

pp. 25- 74

THE TAO OF PHENOMENOLOGY

- 2.1 INTRODUCTION , p25
- 2.2 PHENOMENOLOGY: basic concepts for this study , p28
 - 2.2.1 Introduction
 - 2.2.2 Phenomenology: a brief overview of the term
 - 2.2.3 Phenomenology: interest, scope and nature
 - 2.2.4 Origin and history
 - 2.2.5 Conclusion
- 2.3 TAOISM: BASIC CONCEPTS FOR THIS STUDY , p33
 - 2.3.1 Introduction
 - 2.3.2 Origin and significance
 - 2.3.3 Yin/Yang, and its significance for educational research
 - 2.3.4 The concept of the Five Elements, and its significance for educational research
 - 2.3.5 The body as energy and the significance of this notion for educational research
 - 2.3.6 Concluding remarks
- 2.4 SIMILARITIES BETWEEN PHENOMENOLOGY AND TAOISM RELEVANT TO THIS STUDY , p45
 - 2.4.1 Introduction
 - 2.4.2 Visiting prominent similarities between phenomenology and Taoism
 - 2.4.2.1 Holistic nature
 - 2.4.2.2 The requirement of a transcendental approach
 - 2.4.2.3 An attitude of non-control of data
 - 2.4.2.4 A focus on the essences of existence
 - 2.4.2.5 An understanding of the flux between interdependent realities
 - 2.4.2.6 Application: understanding of the life-world of individuals
 - 2.4.2.7 The role of observation and description as part of the research process
 - 2.4.3 Conclusion

- 2.5 SIGNIFICANT DISCREPANCIES BETWEEN PHENOMENOLOGY AND TAOISM , p68
- 2.6 PROPOSED BENEFITS OF A COMBINED TAOIST-PHENOMENOLOGICAL
APPROACH FOR RESEARCH IN EDUCATION , p70
- 2.7 CONCLUSION , p72

CHAPTER 3

*pp. 75 – 117*THE FACILITATION OF PHENOMENOLOGICAL INTERVIEWS BY MEANS OF REFLEXOLOGY IN TERMS OF THE POSTMODERN ERA3.1 INTRODUCTION *p75*3.2 PERSPECTIVES ON THE POSTMODERN ERA *p77*3.3 FEATURES OF THE POSTMODERN ERA BY WHICH THIS THESIS IS CONTEXTUALISED p83

3.3.1 An overview of the framework

3.3.2 Mistrust of Western philosophies as catalyst to the origin of postmodern theory

3.3.3 Opposition to classical techniques

3.3.4 Reflexivity in the postmodern sense

3.3.5 Relativism

3.3.5.1 Relativity of meaning as particular to the participants

3.3.5.2 Relativity of the consciousness of the researcher as observer

3.3.6 Pastiche

3.3.6.1 Triangulation

3.3.6.2 Increased multiculturalism

3.3.6.3 Crossing of boundaries

3.3.7 Cosmology

3.3.8 The ecological approach

3.3.9 Concluding thoughts on the trends of the postmodern era, with reference to the phenomenological interviewing3.4 CONCLUSION p116

CHAPTER 4
pp. 118 – 150
RESEARCH DESIGN

- 4.1 INTRODUCTION, p118
- 4.2 THE NATURE OF THE RESEARCH DESIGN, p120
 - 4.2.1 Rationale for considering the nature of the research design
 - 4.2.2 The qualitative nature of the research design
 - 4.2.3 The Mouton classification system of research designs: features of relevance to this study
 - 4.2.3.1 The methodological design
 - 4.2.3.2 Life history design
 - 4.2.3.3 Participant observation
 - 4.2.3.4 Philosophical analysis as research design
 - 4.2.4 Conclusion
- 4.3 ETHICAL MEASURES, p127
 - 4.3.1 Introduction
 - 4.3.2 Ethical measures related to qualitative research involving participants
 - 4.3.2.1 Consideration of possible consequences for the participant
 - 4.3.2.2 Debriefing
 - 4.3.2.3 Informed consent
 - 4.3.2.4 Privacy and dignity
 - 4.3.2.5 Anonymity and confidentiality
 - 4.3.2.6 Professional status of researcher
 - 4.3.3 Conclusion
- 4.4 DATA COLLECTION, p131
 - 4.4.1 Introduction
 - 4.4.2 Phenomenological interviews
 - 4.4.2.1 Introduction
 - 4.4.2.2 Interviewing as method of data-collection particular to this thesis

4.4.2.3 Sampling

4.4.2.4 The role of the researcher as instrument

4.4.2.5 The procedure of the interviews

4.4.2.6 Types of data collected during the interviews

4.4.3 Conclusion: the collection of data in terms of the overall aim of this thesis

4.5 RECORD KEEPING, p143

4.6 TRUSTWORTHINESS, p145

4.6.2 Introduction

4.6.3 Strategies and tactics

4.6.3.1 Credibility (truth value)

4.6.3.2 Transferability

4.6.3.3 Dependability

4.6.3.4 Neutrality

4.7 CONCLUSION, p150

CHAPTER FIVE

pp. 151 - 185

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

- 5.1 INTRODUCTION, p151
- 5.2 THE CASES , p152
- 5.3 CONCLUSION , p183

CHAPTER SIX

pp. 186 - 206

CONCLUSIONS, RECOMMENDATIONS AND LIMITATIONS

6.1 INTRODUCTION, p186

6.2 CONCLUSIONS, p187

6.2.1 Conclusions from the literature study

6.2.1.1 Chapter two: phenomenology versus the philosophy that underpins current-day reflexology, namely Taoism

6.2.1.2 Chapter three: this research in terms of the construct that conceptualises the era in which it is carried out, namely the theory of postmodernism

6.2.2 Conclusions from the empirical investigation: the research questions answered

6.2.3 Précis of conclusions

6.3 RECOMMENDATIONS, p201

6.3.1 Recommendations for research relating to possible topics on the usefulness of reflexology for educational purposes in general

6.3.2 Recommendations relating to research in other fields

6.4 LIMITATIONS OF THE RESEARCH, p204

6.5 SUMMARY, p205