
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My appreciation is extended to:

the University of South Africa (UNISA), which granted me a bursary to conduct doctoral research at the University of Toronto, Canada;

the promoter, Professor Annali Basson, for her comments on the draft of the text and for her support during the study; Karen Breckon and Nico Ferreira of the UNISA Library for their assistance in searching for materials; John Henderson for his invaluable editorial comments; and Christa Cromhout for her assistance in preparing the manuscript; colleagues and friends for the interest they have taken in my studies, and, in particular: Christoph Garbers for introducing me to discrimination law; Elize Strydom for being a sounding-board for many of my ideas; and Jane Hodges and Constance Thomas of the ILO, Genève, for informative discussions; and my mother, Ivy du Plessis, mother-in-law, Edwina McGregor, and Joyce Lehabe for helping out with the children when I was overseas conducting research.

Finally, I am grateful to my family: Ross and Felix for often acquiescing to letting me just finish the idea/paragraph that I was busy with; and Gregor for patiently hearing me out on many of my thoughts, and for his support in many ways during the study.
