

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In completing the writing of this thesis I am undeniably indebted to a number of people.

First and foremost, I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to my wife Anita, who has by now become accustomed to the role of single parent, and sons Dean and Cole for their continual encouragement, support, and most of all, willingness to share their home and love with what must have seemed on many occasions to be a complete stranger. For this sacrifice and understanding, a substantial reward is in order!

To the staff of the Western Cape Nature Conservation Board (WCNCB), as well as all those interviewed, who magnanimously gave up their valuable time to assist me and enthusiastically provided me with their honest and unprejudiced opinions so seminal with regard to gaining the necessary insight into the illegal reptile trade phenomenon, my profound thanks and appreciation. A special word of thanks in this regard to WCNCB'S director of operations, Fanie Bekker and director of scientific services, Kas Hamman for granting me permission to undertake research amongst their administrative, scientific and field personnel and allowing me unrestricted access to privileged WCNCB information.

Finally, a very special word of appreciation to my promoter Prof. Sandra Joubert for the arduous and unenviable task of perusing the sometimes lengthy provisional chapters submitted for scrutinisation. Your vigilance, uncanny leadership ability, and professional management of the progression of this research project, as well as the continual provision of premium advice and encouragement were pivotal for its timeous completion. For this I will be eternally grateful.
