

TABLE OF CONTENT

SECTION A

INTRODUCTION, HISTORIC OVERVIEW, NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH ON OFFENDER NEEDS AND RISK ASSESSMENT

CHAPTER ONE

1.	INTRODUCTION AND ORIENTATION	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	Misconceptions regarding imprisonment and the treatment of offenders in South African prisons	4
1.3	National and international research on the assessments of offenders	5
1.3.1	South African research on offender assessment	5
1.3.2	International research on assessment of offenders	6
1.4	The Department of Correctional Services: Service delivery	6
1.4.1	Challenges within the Department of Correctional Services	8
1.4.1.1	The South African crime rate	9
1.4.1.2	Prison population	11
1.4.1.3	Ineffective treatment of offenders	13
1.4.1.4	Staff shortages within the Department of Correctional Services	14
1.4.1.5	Offender assessment	15
1.5	Rationale of the study	15
1.6	Study objectives and contributions to the study	17
1.7	Definitions	20
1.7.1	Criminology	21
1.7.2	Criminologists	22
1.7.3	Assessment	23
1.7.4	Needs Assessment	25
1.7.5	Risk Assessment	27
1.7.6	Rehabilitation	28
1.7.7	Recidivism	30
1.7.8	Interdisciplinary approach	32
1.7.9	Economic crime	32
1.7.10	Violent crime	35
1.7.11	Sexual crimes	36
1.7.12	Paraphilias	37
1.7.13	Personality	38
1.7.14	Cognitive functioning	38
1.7.15	Personality disorders	39
1.7.16	Psychopathy vs. antisocial personality disorder	41
1.7.17	Actuarial scales and measures	43
1.8	Methodology	44

1.8.1	Research design	44
1.8.1.1	Research goals	44
1.8.1.2	Unit of analysis	45
1.8.1.3	Time dimension	45
1.8.1.4	Demarcation of the study field	45
1.8.1.5	Sampling Technique	45
1.8.1.6	Access to subjects	45
1.8.2	Measuring instruments	46
1.8.3	Data collection	46
1.8.4	Data interpretation	46
1.8.5	Research objectives	46
1.9	Outlay of the Study	47

CHAPTER TWO

2.	INTERNATIONAL AND NATIONAL TRENDS AND PERSPECTIVES ON OFFENDER REHABILITATION AND ASSESSMENT PRACTICES
2.1	Introduction	50
2.2	Historical and modern views on the treatment of offenders	52
2.3	The Department of Correctional Services: Punishment as a deterrence mechanism to achieve rehabilitation	55
2.3.1	The history of rehabilitation within South African prisons	57
2.3.1.1	The influence of Apartheid on South African corrections	58
2.3.1.2	Transformation and demilitarisation in South African prisons	59
2.3.1.3	Prisons in the New South Africa	60
2.3.1.4	The new Correctional Services Act: Act 111 of 1998	60
2.3.1.5	Restorative Justice as a cornerstone of rehabilitation in South African corrections	61
2.3.1.6	The implementation of Unit Management within the Department of Correctional Services	63
2.4	Correctional Services and the shift to rehabilitation	65
2.4.1	The need for offender assessment within the Department of Correctional Services	66
2.4.2	The need for individual assessment and treatment of offenders	69
2.4.3	Requirements for an effective assessment system	70
2.4.4	The need for a multi-dimensional approach to offender treatment in South Africa	71
2.5	Service delivery in the Department of Correctional Services: Relevant role players responsible for the treatment of offenders	74
2.5.1	Social work services	74
2.5.2	Psychological services	75

2.5.3	The need for criminological services in corrections	75
2.5.3.1	The field and scope of criminology as a science	76
2.5.3.2	The relevance and applicability of criminology and criminologists to assessment, treatment and corrections	79
2.5.3.3	The benefit of the utilisation of criminologists regarding offender treatment and rehabilitation to corrections	80
2.6	Conclusion	82

CHAPTER THREE

3.	INTERNATIONAL AND NATIONAL RESEARCH ON OFFENDER ASSESSMENT: OFFENDER NEEDS ASSESSMENT
3.1	Introduction	83
3.2	Developments in offender assessment	84
3.3	The need for accurate assessment	85
3.4	The purpose of offender assessment	88
3.5	Needs and risk assessment	90
3.6	Offender needs assessment	92
3.6.1	The need principle	93
3.6.1.1	Criminogenic needs	94
3.6.2	The responsivity principle	95
3.7	Assessment targets for criminal behaviour	96
3.8	Assessment targets for specific types of offenders	102
3.8.1	Needs assessment for sex offenders	103
3.8.1.1	The purpose of sex offender assessment	105
3.8.1.2	International findings with regard to sex offenders	106
3.8.1.3	Sex offender characteristics	107
3.8.1.4	Needs assessment criteria for sex offenders	111
3.8.2	Needs assessment of violent and dangerous offenders	119
3.8.2.1	The purpose of assessing violent offenders	120
3.8.2.2	Characteristics of violent offenders	121
3.8.2.3	Needs assessment targets for violent offenders	122
3.8.3	Overlapping needs assessment targets for general, sex and violent offenders	126
3.9	Offender assessment in Canada and Great Britain	127
3.9.1	Canada: Level of Service Inventory – Revised	128
3.9.1.1	Subcomponents of the LSI-R	129
3.9.1.2	Evaluation of the LSI-R	132
3.9.2	The United Kingdom: Offender Assessment System	133
3.9.2.1	Components of the OASys	134

3.9.2.2	Evaluation of the OASys	137
3.10	Offender assessment in Africa and South Africa	137
3.10.1	Africa	137
3.10.2	South Africa	138
3.11	Conclusion	140

CHAPTER FOUR

4.	INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH ON OFFENDER ASSESSMENT: RISK ASSESSMENT
4.1	Introduction	142
4.2	Categories of risk classification	144
4.3	The purpose of offender risk assessment	146
4.4	The risk principle	147
4.5	Different types of risk	148
4.6	The prediction of future criminal behaviour: An impossible task?	150
4.7	Dynamic and static risk factors	154
4.7.1	Dynamic risk factors	154
4.7.2	Static risk factors	156
4.8	Risk assessment for general recidivism	157
4.8.1	Characteristics of general recidivists	157
4.8.2	General risk assessment indicators for non-specific, sexual and violent offenders	159
4.9	Risk assessment for specific types of offenders	170
4.9.1	Risk assessment of sex offenders	171
4.9.1.1	Risk criteria for sex offenders	172
4.9.2	Risk assessment of violent offenders	182
4.9.2.1	The purpose of risk assessment for violent offenders	184
4.9.2.2	Risk assessment criteria for violent offenders	185
4.10	Evaluation of risk assessment criteria	188
4.10.1	Specific risk assessment criteria associated with sex and violent offenders	188
4.10.2	Corresponding risk criteria for general, sex and violent offenders	189
4.10.3	Corresponding needs and risk assessment targets for general, sex and other violent offenders	189
4.11	Concluding comments	190

SECTION B EMPIRICAL STUDY

CHAPTER FIVE

5.	METHODOLOGICAL OUTLAY AND ASSESSMENT TOOLS
5.1	Introduction	192
5.2	Research design	192
5.2.1	Research goals	193
5.2.1.1	Research objectives	193
5.2.1.2	Unit of analysis	194
5.2.1.3	Access to subjects	195
5.2.1.4	Time dimension	195
5.2.1.5	Demarcation of the study field	196
5.2.1.6	Sampling technique	196
5.3	Measuring instruments	198
5.3.1	Literature study	198
5.3.2	Observation	201
5.3.3	Document analysis	202
5.3.4	In-depth, semi-structured interviews	203
5.3.4.1	Establishing rapport	205
5.3.4.2	Semi-structured interview schedule	206
5.4	Data interpretation	210
5.4.1	Demographic information about the research subjects	211
5.5	ASSESSMENT TOOLS	212
5.5.1	Interviewing	212
5.5.2	Observation	214
5.5.3	Theoretical analysis	214
5.5.3.1	What is a theory?	215
5.5.3.2	Why are theories important in the assessment of criminal behaviour?	216
5.5.4	Theories of crime	216
5.5.5	CLASSICAL CRIMINOLOGY	219
5.5.5.1	Contemporary classicists	220
5.5.6	POSITIVISTIC CRIMINOLOGY	221
5.5.6.1	Contemporary biological positivism	222
5.5.7	TRAIT THEORIES	223
5.5.8	SOCIAL DISORGANISATION THEORIES	224
5.5.9	SOCIAL LEARNING THEORIES	225
5.5.9.1	Neutralisation and drift	226
5.5.10	ANOMIE / STRAIN THEORIES	226
5.5.10.1	Anomie	227
5.5.10.2	General strain theory	227
5.5.11	SUBCULTURAL THEORIES	228
5.5.12	CONTROL THEORIES	229
5.5.13	CRITICAL CRIMINOLOGY	230
5.5.13.1	Labeling theory	230
5.5.13.2	Contemporary labeling theories	231
5.5.13.3	Central theorists of critical criminology	232

5.5.13.4	Feministic criminology	235
5.5.14	INTEGRATED AND DEVELOPMENTAL THEORIES	236
5.5.14.1	Integrated theories of crime	237
5.5.14.2	The criminal event	238
5.5.14.3	An integrated theoretical perspective on delinquent behaviour	238
5.5.14.4	An interactional theory	239
5.5.14.5	Control balance theory	239
5.5.14.6	Social development model	240
5.5.14.7	Social support and crime	240
5.5.15	Developmental theories of crime	241
5.5.15.1	Theory of delinquent development	241
5.5.15.2	Life course persistent offender theory	242
5.5.15.3	Crime and the life course theory	242
5.5.16	Evaluation of theories	243
5.5.16.1	Classical criminology and contemporary classical theories	243
5.5.16.2	Lombroso and early positivists	244
5.5.16.3	Recent biological approaches of crime	244
5.5.16.4	Trait theories	245
5.5.16.5	Social disorganizational theories	245
5.5.16.6	Social learning and differential association	245
5.5.16.7	Drift theory	246
5.5.16.8	Merton's strain theory	246
5.5.16.9	General strain theory	247
5.5.16.10	Subcultural theories	247
5.5.16.11	Lower-class culture theory	248
5.5.16.12	The opportunity theory	248
5.5.16.13	Containment theory	248
5.5.16.14	Bonding theory	249
5.5.16.15	General theory of crime	249
5.5.16.16	Labeling theory	250
5.5.16.17	Critical criminology	250
5.5.16.18	Feministic criminology	251
5.5.16.19	Integrated and developmental theories	251
5.6	Concluding comments	253

CHAPTER SIX

6.	CRIMINOLOGICAL ASSESSMENT OF CASE STUDIES
6.1	Introduction	255
6.2	Case study one	256
	Mr. A: Assessment for classification purposes
6.2.1	Introduction	256
6.2.2	Biographic details	256
6.2.3	Culture	257
6.2.4	Education and employment history	258
6.2.5	Family of origin	258

6.2.6	Childhood and school experiences	260
6.2.7	Crime analysis	262
6.2.7.1	Peer influences	264
6.2.8	Cognitive functioning	265
6.2.8.1	Attitude, associations and intimate relationships	266
6.2.8.2	Sexuality	266
6.2.8.3	Leisure time and hobbies	268
6.2.8.4	Future goals	268
6.2.9	Therapy and treatment in prison	268
6.2.10	Contributory factors to criminal behaviour	269
6.2.11	High-risk situations	269
6.2.12	A theoretical explanation for Mr. A's criminal behaviour	269
6.2.13	Recommendations for intervention purposes	270
6.3	Case study two Mr. B: Assessment for intervention purposes	271
6.3.1	Introduction	271
6.3.2	Biographic details	272
6.3.3	Family of origin	272
6.3.4	Childhood and school experiences	274
6.3.5	Education and employment history	275
6.3.6	Crime analysis	275
6.3.6.1	First offence	275
6.3.6.2	Second offence	275
6.3.6.3	Third offence	278
6.3.7	Adaptation in prison	279
6.3.8	Aggressive and violent behaviour	280
6.3.9	Gang involvement	281
6.3.10	Cognitive functioning	283
6.3.11	Peer associations	286
6.3.12	Intimate relationships and support structure	286
6.3.13	Leisure time and hobbies	287
6.3.14	Future goals	287
6.3.15	Treatment in prison	287
6.3.16	Aetiology of criminal behaviour	288
6.3.17	Intervention indicators	289
6.3.18	Antecedents and/or triggers related to aggressive and violent behaviour	289
6.3.19	A theoretical explanation for Mr. B's criminal behaviour	290
6.3.20	Recommendations	291
6.4	Case study three Mr. C: Assessment for risk management purposes	291
6.4.1	Introduction	292
6.4.2	Culture	292
6.4.3	Biographic details	293
6.4.4	Parents and childhood	294
6.4.4.1	Family structure	297
6.4.5	Analysis of criminality and associated factors	297
6.4.5.1	Leisure and recreational activities	299
6.4.5.2	Gang involvement	299
6.4.5.3	Substance abuse	301
6.4.5.4	Violent and aggressive behaviour	301

6.4.5.5	Intimate relationships	302
6.4.5.6	Previous treatment	302
6.4.5.7	Personality and cognitive functioning	303
6.4.6	Origin and risk factors associated with criminal behaviour	305
6.4.7	Antecedents for criminal, violent and aggressive behaviour	305
6.4.8	High-risk situations	306
6.4.9	Indicators for intervention	306
6.4.10	A theoretical explanation for Mr. C's criminal behaviour	307
6.4.11	Recommendations	308
6.5	Case study four Mr. D: Pre-parole assessment	308
6.5.1	Introduction	310
6.5.2	Biographic details	310
6.5.3	Family of origin	311
6.5.4	Childhood experiences	311
6.5.5	Schooling, education and employment	316
6.5.6	Crime and criminal history	317
6.5.6.1	Offence analysis	317
6.5.6.2	Peer pressure and influences	317
6.5.6.3	Leisure time, hobbies and personal interests	318
6.5.6.4	History of antisocial and deviant sexual behaviour	319
6.5.6.5	Multiple paraphilias	319
6.5.6.6	Deviant sexual fantasies and arousal patterns	322
6.5.6.7	Substance abuse	323
6.5.7	Prison gang involvement	323
6.5.8	Cognitive functioning	324
6.5.8.1	Aggressive, violent and sadistic behaviour	324
6.5.8.2	Attitude	324
6.5.8.3	Intimate relationships	324
6.5.8.4	Suicide attempts	325
6.5.8.5	Insight, remorse and rationalisation	326
6.5.8.6	Future goals	326
6.5.9	Previous treatment	327
6.5.10	Origin of deviant behaviour	328
6.5.11	Triggers	329
6.5.12	High-risk situation	329
6.5.13	Probability to reoffend	330
6.5.14	A theoretical explanation for Mr. D's criminal behaviour	331
6.5.15	Recommendation	333
6.6	Conclusion	333

SECTION C RESEARCH RESULTS, SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

CHAPTER SEVEN

7.	RESEARCH RESULTS, SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION
7.1	Introduction	335
7.2	Research results	336

7.2.1	Primary objective: Offender assessment from a criminological perspective	336
7.2.2	Secondary objectives	337
7.2.2.1	Determination of needs and risks for general, sex and violent offenders	337
7.2.2.2	National and international research findings on offender assessment	341
7.2.2.3	Relevant assessment tools for offender assessment practices	342
7.2.2.4	A scientific analysis, understanding and explanation of criminal behaviour	343
7.2.2.5	Identification of the causes and motives of criminal behaviour	344
7.2.2.6	Individual assessment of selected case studies	345
7.3	Recommendations	346
7.4	Conclusion and summary	347

Bibliography

APPENDIX A
APPENDIX B
APPENDIX C
APPENDIX D
APPENDIX E

FIGURES

Figure 1.9.1	Outlay of Chapters	49
Figure 3.1	The different stages of sex offending	109
Figure 4.1	International and national research on offender assessment	190