Bakolokang was followed in the chieftainship by Lotlamoreng, son of Ke Galepile, eldest son of Montshiwa. The succession of Lotlamoreng to the chieftainship gave rise to a bitter dispute in the tribe which was sharply divided on this issue.

At the request of the Native Affairs Department ~~of~~ and out of respect for the feelings of Chief Lotlamoreng and his tribe who to this day are still very sensitive about the matter, I have decided not to give a full account of the circumstances surrounding this delicate subject. Suffice it to say that in the fight for his rights to the chieftainship Lotlamoreng had staunch supporters in Mmaditshukudu, son of Lekoko, and in the leading men of the Masegetla section of the Tshidi tribe to which his mother belonged. On the other hand some of his chief opponents were his own relatives on his father's side. Chief Lotlamoreng has been ruling the tribe since 1919.
